

Adjunct Associate Professor Richard Monypenny
School of Business, James Cook University, Townsville

Richard Monypenny is currently a Adjunct Associate Professor in the School of Business at James Cook University in Townsville. His research and supervision interests are as follows:

- Contestability between Road, Rail and Coastal Shipping: The case for the Townsville Port Authority
- Possible Contributions that Clustering could make to the Local Music Industry
- Possible Implications of Peak Oil: A case study of Townsville
- Skill Capacity Building through Local Cooperation
- Strategic Management in Response to Serendipity for SME's
- Transition Management for SME's (A conference paper for the November 2008 Australian General Practice Network Conference in Darwin.)

Richard is currently supervising PhD Students in the topics of Sea Change Population Growth in Cairns; Innovation in Small Business in North Queensland; Economic Growth in Indonesia and The Business of Medical General Practice in Townsville. In 2007, Richard supervision the honour thesis - Export Demand For Tahitian Black Pearls and in 2006 the honour thesis - An Analysis of Intra-Industry Trade between Australia and Asia Pacific Nations.